Course information

Course prerequisites
Students should be interested in theoretical and empirical research and should have advanced knowledge of finance, economics, and econometrics. This seminar is primarily designed for MBF students who have already finished their compulsory coursework. The content of these compulsory courses are considered as prerequisites.

The course is recommended for MBF-students in their third semester of the program.

Course content
This seminar discusses current research topics in the fields of real estate finance, real estate economics, housing and urban economics as well as real estate econometrics. Students can either conduct an empirical analysis by using real financial data or can choose a topic from real estate finance theory. Empirical topics will be proposed from all real estate finance areas such as real estate asset pricing, real estate management and corporate finance, real estate derivatives and securitization, and real estate risk management and valuation. We also welcome topic suggestions from students. The seminar will prepare students for their final theses by providing an overview of important research questions, common methods of analysis, and frequently discussed issues in real estate economics and finance.

Course structure

Agenda

There will be an introductory session at the beginning of the semester, where seminar topics are presented. In the following, students will be requested to opt for a topic and elaborate on it individually or in groups up to two. The research outcome is presented and discussed at the two-day seminar sessions on December 1 and 2 in Bregenz.
