Course information

Course prerequisites

Typically, students are in the fifth semester.

Learning objectives

Acquire a basic understanding of public international law // learn to understand judgments, discuss on that basis, and extract the important information from judgments // learn to think like an international lawyer.

Course content

This course offers an introduction to international law. By means of concrete legal documents from specific cases (such as judgments of international courts and resolutions of the UN Security Council), we discuss the structural aspects of the international legal order. The focus is on classic international law (including actors, sources, responsibility, use of force), but the more specific regimes, such as human rights and humanitarian law are also dealt with. Students are expected to study very carefully the documents that are made available before they attend class. Tutorials supplement the lectures. They are taught by teaching assistants. They are a necessary part of the course, i.e. you need to attend the tutorials to cope with this course, its content, and the workload. The style of the tutorials is not fundamentally different from the lectures, but they give you the possibility to interact even more.

Course structure and indications of the learning and teaching design

Weekly course of 90 minutes with lectures, interaction, and discussion. Students prepare in advance by means of the readings made available. Tutorials are part of the course.

Course literature

A reader will be made available on Canvas on a continuous basis during the course.

Additional course information

Thomas Burri is a professor of international law and European law. He is the academic director of the Master in International Law (MIL) program.
